INTRODUCTION

As STATED in the introduction to Volume V, no major changes have been adopted in the general scope of this series.

In July 1944, the International Commission on Zoological Nomenclature republished Opinion 1 with editorial notes by Francis Hemming, Secretary to the Commission. This Opinion originally defined the word "indication" in Article 25. In his editorial notes Mr. Hemming pointed out that in cases where a generic name is proposed without diagnosis or designation of type, it is valid only if (a) it contains but a single species, in which case that species is the type by monotypy, or (b) if among its contained species is one so named that the principles of tautonymy may be invoked to determine the type. If, however, the new genus contains two or more species without diagnosis or designated type, and its type cannot be determined by tautonymy, then such a name is to be regarded as a nomen nudum and any subsequent author would be free to republish the name in question.

If this undoubtedly correct interpretation is accepted it will be necessary to change hundreds of generic names in all branches of zoology. For reasons stated beyond, it has not been adopted in this volume. It directly affects certain names in the following manner: in the present volume are a number of generic names commonly credited to Bonaparte, most of which were published in 1854 in the Ateneo Italiano, a rare publication which apparently is lacking in American libraries. Bonaparte's paper, however, is better known from a separately paged reprint entitled "Conspectus Volucrum Zygodactylorum." A glance at the "Conspectus" shows that many of the generic names there proposed by Bonaparte will not meet the requirements of Article 25, as defined in Opinion 1, although this fact was entirely overlooked until Mr. Hemming's notes appeared. Many of these names have been in continuous use for over ninety years and had been listed as valid in all standard "nomenclators."

After much deliberation, and on the advice of Mr. Hemming, it has seemed the wisest course not to change over in the middle of a series from the former (incorrect) interpretation of Article 25, to the present (correct) interpretation, especially so since a strongly backed petition has been submitted to the Commission praying that the International Zoological Congress be invited to amend Article 25 to restore officially the meaning commonly attributed to it. The question is at the moment sub judice. Should the International Zoological Congress ultimately decide to uphold the present interpretation, subsequent volumes of this Check-List will conform to the established usage, and I shall endeavor to publish elsewhere the changes in generic names which would then be necessary.

The woodpeckers have not been monographed since Hargitt did so for the eighteenth volume of the Catalogue of Birds in the British Museum, which was published in 1890; his arrangement was that followed by Sharpe in Volume II of his "Hand-list," appearing in 1900. Hargitt's classification is not in accord with modern concepts of the relationships within the Picidae, consequently a more up-to-date sequence of subfamilies and genera has been attempted here.

The true woodpeckers (subfamily Picinae) may be divided into two major groups on the basis of external foot structure; in one group the outer hind toe is not longer than the outer front toe, as opposed to another group in which the outer hind toe is definitely longer than the outer front toe. The latter condition is correlated with a bill having a wide "nasal shelf," and nostril situated at least midway between the culmen and the edge of the upper mandible, often nearer the edge of the mandible. The group in which the outer hind toe is not longer than the outer front toe has a narrower nasal shelf and the nostril is situated nearer the culmen. Dr. Burt has shown that as far as North American genera are concerned, these same external characters are correlated with certain anatomical features and should the same prove to be true of the remaining genera of woodpeckers, the Picinae could well be divided into two subfamilies. In this volume the group with the shorter hind toe and bill with narrow nasal shelf consists of the genera Geocolaptes to Leuconerpes inclusive and the group with the longer hind toe and wider nasal shelf commences with Sphyrapicus and includes the balance of the genera.

The manuscript was completed and submitted for publication about the first of October 1947 and was revised to include new forms described up to 31 December 1946; a few forms appearing after 1 January 1947 were also included, but no real effort was made to search the literature appearing after the latter date.

For assistance in insuring the publication of this volume it is a pleasure to acknowledge needed aid from Mr. Boardman Conover, Mr. Jean Delacour, Mr. Rodolphe M. de Schauensee, Mr. James C. Greenway, Jr., Mr. Robert T. Moore, Mrs. Walter W. Naumburg, Dr. Max M. Peet, Mr. William H. Phelps, Dr. S. Dillon Ripley II, and Mrs. Carll Tucker.

For reading the typescript, either in whole or in part and for making valuable suggestions and corrections and for verifying references I again have to thank Dr. James P. Chapin, Mr. Herbert G. Deignan, Dr. Herbert Friedmann, Mr. Rodolphe M. deSchauensee, Dr. Ernst Mayr, Dr. Alexander Wetmore, and Dr. John T. Zimmer; my colleague, Mr. James C. Greenway, Jr., was always ready to discuss difficult cases as they arose.

Necessary comparative material has been loaned by the American Museum of Natural History, Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, Carnegie Museum, Chicago Natural History Museum, and the United States National Museum; my thanks are extended to the authorities of these institutions.

Mrs. R. Earl Bowen of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, who has figured prominently in typing the copy for all the preceding volumes, typed the greater part of the manuscript for this one, the balance being done by Miss Ruth Inman, secretary to the Bird Department of the Museum of Comparative Zoölogy. As usual, Mrs. Peters was of invaluable assistance in reading the proof.

The index was prepared by Mrs. R. E. Bowen.

Lower and middle Syr Darya, up the Jany Darya to Chimaz, also the saxaul country of Kyzyl Kum and Barak Island in the Aral Sea. Doubtfully distinct from D. l. albipennis.
